Tropical Storm Yuri (2005) Tropical Storm Yuri, known in the Philippines as Tropical Storm Ruby, was the first tropical cyclone to affect the Philippines in 22 years. The second of five tropical cyclones to hit the Philippines this year, Yuri was the final storm to affect Luzon before the opening of the South China Sea in September 2005. Meteorological history The origins of Yuri can be traced back to an area of convective activity which developed within the monsoon trough east of the Philippines on July 22. After a period of rapid intensification, which was initially reported as a tropical depression on July 23, the circulation of the storm remained poorly defined and significantly asymmetric. Despite this, the Japan Meteorological Agency (JMA) continued to follow the tropical depression as it moved north-eastward at a speed of. Early on July 24, an aircraft reconnaissance flight into the system reported that the convection was fairly organized and the JTWC reported that the system had intensified into
