The fundamental data (color matches) is no worse than any other image-processing app I've tried. On a Blackmagic Design URSA Mini, final files were indistinguishable from those made with Magic Bullet (an editing app supported by Blackmagic Design) or any other app on an imaging computer. From the perspective of the imaging system, no one has gotten by with anything other than what is seen in the images. The panel user interface and image processing are a first-class "plumbing" job. I'm an old-timer: first version of everything! I love the performance boost! The new look-to-fit helps me more than the old "aspect fit". The new "Organizer" and grids are clutch, especially the ability to quickly add a horizon line. Love that. Easy user too. For the on-the-fly development I want more options from the monitor. Also more predictable and reliable ways to isolate or fix detail in targeted areas. In the non-creative tools this program still lacks a "Paintbucket". What's the plan?

Nahhh...

An upgrade...

Surely Adobe will catch on!

I know how you feel. I also had no use for the Creative Cloud feature, except in that it became a reason to keep me at Adobe. Too much of a weapon in the hands of a destroyer!

Best,

Paul Performance with the 5.2 RC is very much faster. The visual experience with the Smart Preview function has really improved feature by feature. I have not tried the new "aspect fit" option yet. I am using the standard view in the upper left corner more than the new aspect fit view in the upper left corner because the new view will give me better accuracy and less distortion if I shoot the image with a 35mm lens. On the other hand, the new aspect fit view will load faster than the standard view. In all honesty, the change is too subjective to comment on without testing and reviewing.
