Over the past few years, the team at Adobe has made significant investments in web technologies to modernize Photoshop and support a range of emerging client technologies. This enables professionals to use Photoshop and the web in more intuitive ways, without sacrificing the industry-leading capabilities that they've trusted for over 45 years. At MAX 2018, Adobe is highlighting our latest efforts to bring Photoshop to the web across multiple platforms and operating systems. "Customers' workflow is an important aspect of Photoshop," said Tom Hogarty, senior vice president, marketing, Adobe. "We're bringing forward the best, most natural ways for them to collaborate, from within Photoshop, over the web or on mobile devices. Plus, this new release brings an upgrade to the canvas. We are continuing with the tradition of making Photoshop the most accessible, comprehensive and feature-packed image editing software, allowing every designer to work any way they want to." The Features tab in the updated Photoshop interface enables users to quickly access an array of key creative tools for one-click edits and easy navigation. The New features tab, available from the View menu, allows users to navigate to a specific state of the document (i.e., the “first painted layer”) via a single click, making it easier and more intuitive to quickly move back and forth between “undo”, “revert”, “redo” and “redo setup” features. These features make it easier to work when images are larger than fits the screen, such as on a mobile device. In the updated Photoshop UI, the Feature Selection toolbar lets users seamlessly select new features or switch between operations, without having to exit the feature area. This updated interface reveals the feature and interface changes at a higher resolution on new devices. On new devices, users can now opt to view a high-resolution preview of the page while the feature area is being edited. Additional details are available in the Adobe Creative Cloud Release Notes.
