The aim of this study was to evaluate the safety and effectiveness of a transfusion algorithm based on availability of fresh frozen plasma (FFP) and other components as early as possible in critically ill patients. The medical records of all transfusion episodes with a hypotensive response were retrospectively reviewed at the Intensive Care Unit at the University Hospital, Zagreb, between 2006 and 2014. The number of FFP, red blood cells (RBC) and plasma units administered and amount of FFP administered in FFP- and non-FFP-treated hypotensive episodes were evaluated. In addition, the number of FFP, platelets and whole blood units administered to hypotensive episodes treated with or without FFP was compared. There were 68 hypotensive episodes in 43 patients. FFP
