wwe smackdown vs raw 2009 pc game free download softonic wwe smackdown vs raw 2009 pc game free download softonicQ: How to send email from web app I have a requirement where I need to send out 100's of emails. It has to happen from a web site so I don't have to have them log into the system. Also, it has to happen in the background. I was doing this before with a cron job to run a php script, but that doesn't seem to work anymore as email is only accepted from a certain IP. I can still send from my local computer, but not from anything else. What is a good way to achieve this, preferably without a separate domain/server. I can get a domain name from GoDaddy if it's not possible with my current hosting setup. Thanks! A: You can set up a cron job to run at a specific interval and send an email out from the server. If you don't want to use a separate domain for that, then you can do that as well. However, if you want to set up a dedicated server for this task, then you don't need to have a cron job. You can use the PHP mail() function for it. You have 3 things to keep in mind with this. Your IP will need to be whitelisted. Your IP needs to belong to the server that will run the PHP script. You need a mail server. You can have a dedicated mail server or use something like Zimbra. If you want to use the dedicated server, then you need a mail server (e.g. Postfix) installed on your server. If you are on a shared hosting, you won't have access to your server's configuration files. So, you can either install a mail server on the server or use something like Zimbra, which is a webmail client that has an integrated mail server. f988f36e3a
